

Steven Parent is an intuitive, hard working, and perseverant person who always strives to push his own limits and advantageously immerse himself in the best of every situation.

He was born December 20th, 1991 and has been drumming for over half of his young life in addition to being a lifelong lover of music. He prides himself on being an open minded listener of many different veins of music, and is consequently well versed in many different facets of music.

Because he has spent many hours recording practice sessions, recording in outside studios, and recording in his home studio, he has extensive expertise in capturing a superlative drum take in a concise time frame.

Many musicians strive to achieve things in only one area of the music industry, such as either recording, playing live/touring, or being a clinician/educator. Steven strives to excel in all three of these areas as much as possible.

In addition to his recording experience, he has played live with countless bands of many different genres and possesses a fearless, authentic approach to playing to the masses. He is also a caring, hands on drum teacher who has worked at music shops and has independently taught.
